Bryn Mawr Neighborhood Association Annual POTLUCK Dinner

and Board Elections

Wednesday, May 9, 2012

6:00-8:00pm

at Bryn Mawr Elementar

Annual Bryn Mawr
Neighborhood Association Potluck Dinner on May 9th.
The dinner will begin at 6pm and we ask that neighbors bring a dish to share. This wonderful event is held in the cafeteria of Bryn Mawr Elementary School.
The BMNA will provide a main dish as well as beverages.

We have invited several public officials to our event. Beginning at 7 pm, they will each be given a few minutes to speak about what is happening in their positions. The BMNA will also speak about some of the accomplishments in the past year, future projects and membership.

Neighbors will vote for President, Vice President, Secretary and Area Representatives in areas 2, 4 and 6. Contact Patty Wycoff at pwycoff@comcast.net or 612-377-4565 if you are interested in serving as an area representative.

Door prizes donated by local businesses will be drawn at the end of the dinner.

City update: Councilmember Lisa Goodman

Two more Lunch with Lisa on the 4th Wed of month. On April 25rd, there will be a presentation on Pedestrian/Biking information. On May 23rd, a speaker will discuss Park Planning for Theodore Wirth and Brownie Lake.

Street sweeping has started.

Recycling-Compostable bags will be required after April 30th is deadline. Paper and compostable plastic is acceptable.

New items can be recycled, per City of Minneapolis. There is a single sort pilot program that may allow everything in one bag.

City wants to go to composting. Linden Hills pilot program going well.

Urban Ag.-The City has passed an ordinance allowing urban agriculture. Residents can grow and sell produce -15 days of sale and 3 days in row are allowed. Size of hoop house can only be 6.5' high and up for 180 days, only. No chickens allowed, unless at home. Must go thru approval process.

Ward 7 map-Redistricting changed from north because of population issues. The change takes place in Nov. 2013. Redistricting has created 3 wards that have most of poverty and crime, but, allows for election of minority representatives.

Hearing on Vikings Stadium is coming up April 24th. Many Bryn Mawr residents against MetroDome site.

With the division of Bryn Mawr into two different precincts, it is possible that the polling places may be changed. Lisa asked if the board had a preference and a show of hands indicated that most members think that both precincts should vote in the same polling place. She indicated that she will suggest that Bryn Mawr have separate polling locations for the two districts in the same location, such as Bryn Mawr Elementary.

Redistricting update-Barry and Vida:

Small piece of land above Basset Creek added back to 7th Ward. Marlin plus past presidents and Margaret Kelliher testified on our behalf. Harrison asked for a part of Bryn Mawr for their economic gain. BMNA will work to create bridges with Harrison to clear up any misunderstandings. Many thanks to Barry and Vida for their excellent work.

Nominations - Marlin

Vida would like to serve on the Board but is flexible about the role. A neighborhood resident has expressed interest in being on Board. Ballot will soon be ready.

2012 Membership drive-

The campaign is going well with 218 people signed up and making contributions, some used PayPal.

Patty Wycoff, NC activity report -

Garage Sale Update will be the location of BMNA Garage Sale. Volunteers are needed to man it. Patty will send an email. A Police Officer is lined up to direct traffic. There are three new food vendors. Sparks will now be serving lunch and should be notified. Map will be posted on website on the Friday night before.

From the Editor

am so proud to live in a neighborhood that takes the care and Lkeeping of Earth so seriously. When I go other places, even just to other Minnesota cities or areas of Minneapolis, I am surprised by the lack of enthusiasm toward conservation of our resources.

I remember once at someone's house being told that, even though they do have recycling in their community, they don't participate because it is just a hassle. That day I became the crazy lady who might take her trash with her when she leaves if you are not going to recycle it! I am also the person who brings her own water and will refill from your tap, so don't even bother to offer me your single-use plastic bottles. I like real plates and cloth napkins, even for a crowd.

Even so, I think of myself on the low end of true green living. I do what I think everyone can and should do. When I look around the neighborhood, I see so much being done by so many - it is inspiring. And it is all fed by a collective appreciation for what we have here and a willingness to play a role in keeping it around for a long time.

Since Earth Day was just last weekend, I thought a little tribute to "green" Bryn Mawr was in order and where better to start than Earth Day itself? How many neighborhoods with only 1200 households can sustain THREE Earth Day cleanup sites? Thank you to everyone who came out and helped.

I also appreciate our culture of biking and walking. Where else could there be such a healthy business district with so little parking?

Speaking of parking, how about that little red "HourCar" parked over at Anwatin school? As long as we are mentioning the school, there is an amazing community garden going in behind Anwatin. The students will be creating compost from school waste while learning important lessons about sustainable agriculture and we may even get to do a little organic farming. Oh, and did I say organic? How about the great selection of healthy produce and other goods that has revitalized business at the Bryn Mawr Market.

For the past four years, the BMNA has sponsored a "community project" every year and so many are related to living green. The latest proposals are the Big Belly Solar Compactor and the Little Free Library, but past projects have included the energy challenge, solar panels and raingardens.

Finally there is the Festival of Garage Sales, the ultimate in recycling and reusing. Hats off to you Bryn Mawr.

"When we have provided against cold, hunger, and thirst all the rest is but vanity and excess" elcome to your vanity and excess leader! I'm so vain I really do think that song is about me. Enough about me, there is so much stuff and nonsense around here that "me cup is overflowin".

It's a wild world

Bryn Mawr is surrounded by an embarrassment of riches when it comes to natural habitat. Hawks, owls, fox, deer, coyotes, and turkeys abound in our community, not always in a nice way. Last month someone was driving on Penn avenue right by the gas station in broad daylight and "KAPOW", a deer comes flying through their front windshield. The healthy buck stopped there and the motorist is in therapy!

Doug Denham (area 5) was walking his dog as always in the morning and carrying a big night stick. I asked him what the stick was for and he told me about a coyote stalking them in Bryn Mawr meadows the day before. Coyotes seem to be the popular go to bad guys lately. Tales of missing cats, dogs and dead foxes are being pinned on the wily coyote these days. They're about as popular as buckthom!

Scott McLaughlin our superstar NRP co-ordinator and mail carrier told me that the wild turkeys tend to be a little territorial and cranky. So much so that carriers in the Longfellow neighborhood call their dog mace canisters, "turkey mace canisters".

Stand your Ground?

Apparently, we are not all Trayvon Martin. There are a folks right here in idyllic Bryn Mawr that might be more "Zimmerman-like". I talked to a neighbor awhile ago, who talked about "patrolling" his alley at three in the morning with a loaded gun. Yikes! These angry pistol packers scare the living heck out of me. Please calm the heck down, call 911 if you see something suspicious, we don't need anymore vigilant justice here or anywhere.

More important stuff...

You've heard me pontificate on more than one occasion about the need to bridge the communication gap between the Harrison neighborhood and our own. Those of us who live and work around downtown Bryn Mawr know that the lines of these two neighborhoods are often blurred. Mostly, it is by Harrison folks who spend a lot of time at our venues and even sport Bryn Mawr stickers on their cars. With the Van White Parkway which will run between downtown Minneapolis behind Dunwoody straight to Glenwood avenue in the process of happening in the not too distant future, changes in the Harrison demographic is already happening. It is still a diverse community, much more that our own neighborhood, but that may skew upward as in gentrification, which can be viewed as a good thing or a bad thing depending on your point of view.

I recently popped into Venture-North a brand new used bike/coffee shop on Glenwood (just down from Milda's). What a cool place! It is a non-profit, run in conjunction with Redeemer Lutheran church that teaches low income kids in the community how to fix up old bikes for resale. They also have nights where people can come in to repair their own bikes using the tools and expertise of the folks that work there. Another cool thing is the closest Nice Ride rack to Bryn Mawr right outside the shop's door.

Plans also for the new Wirth Co-Operative food store are well underway to be located in Harrison. Bryn Mawr's own Jenny Warner is the President and would love to sign up more of her neighbors.

The Bryn Mawr Neighborhood Association has proposed a rotating ambassadorship program between the two neighborhoods where a different board member attends the monthly meeting of the other to help promote a greater understanding between us. Occupy West Minneapolis!

...and still more stuff

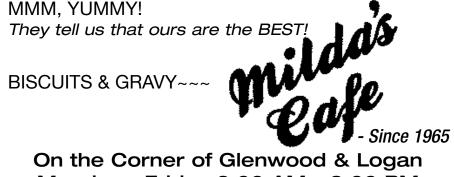

You may have seen popping up in other Southwest neighborhood these cool little stands that act as free book exchange stations called Little Free Libraries. We may be joining the fun as our neighborhood project committee is looking into putting one or two around downtown Bryn Mawr. You give a book, you take book, you bring it back, whatever, it's all on an honor system and I'm already lining up books to lend!

If you get this before the Garage Sale Weekend, then a note to our newer neighbors, it gets a little crazy around here, so be prepared. Strategize, don't give up your parking spot, otherwise you will be hauling your groceries a block and half from your house.

Larry at the Bryn Mawr Market thinks the Twins are going to lose a hundred games and is posting every loss. I am looking for your favorite crow recipes so that I can give him a gourmet feast at the end of this season. Oh yee of little faith eat plenty of crow!!

I've also challenged Jannery at Cuppa Java to a little one-on-one basketball. She thinks she can school this 67-year-old baller; "Think again sister!" And stop ducking me, I am so pumped!

On that little bit of trash talking, I will end this monthly journey into the heart and soul of Bryn Mawr, keep your eyes on the prize and don't forget to BOOGIE!

Earth Day Cleanup a Success

The 2012 Minneapolis Parks Earth Day cleanup continued its successful tradition on a brisk Saturday, April 21. About three dozen neighbors and volunteers participated to help pick up the winter debris. Thanks to everyone for your contribution!

One of the many rewarding aspects of this project is that each year our pile of collected debris shrinks. Unfortunately we always have the trash, but the volume seems to be on a pattern of decline. I definitely notice fewer plastic bottles and grocery bags (two huge litter problems) as I walk through the park. Let's hope that this trend continues for the sake of our parks, waterways, the environment, and ourselves. If you missed the event and still want to participate, remember that every day is an Earth day. You can pick up litter anywhere and anytime, and check www.reduce.org for information on how to reduce our environmental impact.

BMNA Community Project Selected

deas for projects that will improve our community were solicited from neighbors during February and March. The Community Project Committee created a prioritized list, evaluated the projects, and made a recommendation for a 2012 project at the April BMNA meeting.

The BMNA Board has elected to pursue two projects in the coming months: build a Little Free Library in downtown Bryn Mawr and pursue a partnership with the Park Board to place a Big Belly Solar Compactor and Compacting Recycler in Bryn Mawr Meadows.

Read more about Little Free Libraries at http://www.littlefreelibrary.org and

http://www.tcdailyplanet.net/ arts/column/courtney-algeo/ little-free-libraries

Find out about the Big Belly Solar Compactor and Compacting Recycler at http://bigbellysolar.com/ solutions/compactor/

The committee evaluated the suggestions using a set of criteria including:

- Is it possible (politically, physically)?
- Does it meet the budget ($0 -$2000)?
- Is it sustainable long term?
- · Does it have neighborhood wide impact?
- Is there leadership (an identified neighbor) to get the project done?

The committee keeps a running list of recommendations, and all ideas were considered. We appreciate the suggestions made and hope you will submit ideas for future projects to jesswiley@comcast.net, or 612-374-3481.

The BMNA Community Project has been in place for the last five years. Committee members are Rick Carter, chair, (Area 3), Jay Peterson (Area 6), Steve Harvey (Area 7), and Jessica Wiley (Area 3).

Building Better Communities Through Neighborhoods

Conference held to help neighborhood organizations enhance resident participation

In February I attended the first annual community conference workshop held in South Minneapolis. One of the goals of the daylong workshop was to share successes and failures of neighborhood projects. Another focus was to highlight some of the issues that face underrepresented groups, such as those with visual or hearing impairments and economic or racial disparities. I wanted to share a few of my thoughts and provide a few resources to our neighbors.

The sunny and early Saturday event kicked off with a keynote address by Angela Glover Blackwell of Policy Link followed by a guest panel of community and national leaders. The remainder of the day was spent in various workshops that addressed topics such as persons with disabilities, educational gaps, health programs, safety and violence, community outreach, organization planning and governance, park and neighborhood revitalization, and the environment.

The best neighborhoods are made up of people who are active in their communities but more importantly interact with their neighbors. Take action, be mindful and open to the fact that many people in your area have varying needs. Perhaps volunteer with the BMNA, your faith or school organization, donate to a worthy cause or even help a co-worker during a hard time in their lives. I'm just a volunteer, with a family, and I cannot contribute as much time as I'd like, but I care about our neighborhood because I love it here.

Spreading good gestures will only build a better community. As spring settles in and with the summer on the horizon I know a lot more of us will spend time outside. It's a great opportunity for you to start or to get involved with your neighbors. The following websites have useful resources for those looking to get more involved.

Safety Committee

Bryn Mawr neighbors:

Tam one of two volunteer co-chairs of the new Bryn Mawr Neighborhood Association (BMNA) Safety Committee. We were among a group of neighbors who met with representatives of the Fourth Precinct last fall after two burglaries on the 400 block of Oliver Avenue and continuing drug deals on Cedar Lake Road (near, at, and across the street from the gas station).

Because I live near downtown Bryn Mawr, I am keenly aware of the drug deals and the impact they have on neighbors who see them daily. It's a livability issue as well as a safety concern.

At the meeting last fall, we talked with other Area 3 residents whose streets are used for buying and selling drugs. These transactions bring to Bryn Mawr people who are openly contemptuous of our neighborhood. The police representative with whom we met made it clear that the precinct is kept busy with serious crimes on the North Side and is not prepared to respond routinely to calls about drug trafficking in Bryn Mawr. So—we're more or less on our own, at least on this issue.

The BMNA stepped forward and formed the Safety Committee, and now we're wondering what's happening in other areas—both good and bad—and what ideas you may have for the neighborhood as a whole. Are there block clubs? Informal block or multi-block associations? We'd like to hear from you. Email me at pmurphy@murphy-design.com or call me at 612-333-0144.

The next regularly scheduled meeting will be held May 16th, 6:30, basement of Cuppa Java. Please join us, either as a new member of the committee or as a visitor.

Eloise Butler Widflower

Garden & Bird Sanctuary

IT'S MAY AND SPRING HAS SPRUNG AT THE WILD-FLOWER GARDEN!

he Eloise Butler Wildflower Garden showcases a spectacular display of woodland wildflowers each spring. Visit the Garden this month to revel in the beauty of the woodlands in May. Look for wild ginger, trout lilies, and trillium as you stroll under the vibrant canopy of flowering trees. Bring your binoculars or borrow a pair of ours to spot the migratory spring songbirds fueling up before they finish their journey north. It is a magnificent time of year to enjoy what the Wildflower Garden has to offer.

Every weekend Eloise Butler Wildflower Garden Naturalists offer wildflower walks for families with kids and folks young at heart at the Garden. Learn about the latest blossoms and birds on these fabulous (and free!) explorations of the Garden. Each Saturday morning in May at 7:30am and 9:30am free birding programs are offered for new and experienced bird watchers. It's a wonderful opportunity to spend time in the field with a seasoned group of birders.

Themed tours on a variety of natural history topics are available on weekends. These programs will delve a little deeper into particular subjects like the Quaking Bog, birding skills, wildflower identification and more. Special classes take things a step further bringing local specialists into the Garden to teach you about the wonders of nature within the Garden gates. Please see the calendar and program descriptions for more information.

Program Registration:

Go online to www.minneapolisparks.org to register using ActiveNet, stop in the Martha Crone Visitors Shelter, or call us at 612-370-4903. All programs begin at the Shelter unless otherwise noted.

Garden Information and Inquiries:

To ask Garden related questions or to inquire about plants in bloom and recent bird sightings please stop by the Martha Crone Visitors Shelter or call 370-4903 during Shelter hours.

Turf and Grass-like Weeds

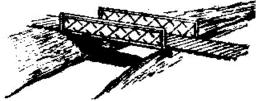

nlike many other plantings, including perennial and annual flowers, turf is a massed assembly of largely homogeneous or at least closely related plants. Another important distinction is that turf is a planting that we expect to walk and run upon, and even to play and tackle each other upon - which is not a need our flower and shrub gardens are called upon to satisfy. Thus for some applications, it is sustainable to cultivate a healthy, attractive lawn. Understanding grass and grass-like weeds is important to perennial and annual gardeners too.

This month's column discusses Kentucky Bluegrass, a common and predominant component of most lawns, as well as three common grass weeds or grass-like weeds: Crabgrass, Quackgrass, and Yellow Nutsedge.

Understanding growth habits of grass and weeds is essential to success in establishing, maintaining, and rejuvenating one's lawn. Based on their growth habits, three types of grasses are: bunch-type grasses, rhizomatous grasses, and stoloniferous grasses. Most perennials, including perennial omamental grasses such as Indian Grass and Miscanthus sinensis Purpurascens, and the annual Purple Fountain Grass are of a bunch-type, meaning that they expand from a central point. Their advantage is that these plants stay within bounds. Bunchtype turfgrasses including perennial rye-grass, do not spread widely and thus a non-uniform lawn surface is formed. Rhizomatous grasses do forma uniform surface because of spreading underground stems that terminate in a shoot that grows above ground into a new grass plant, which in turn, can spread via rhizomes. Kentucky Bluegrass is a an example with positive consequences. Quackgrass is a rhizomatous grass with negative consequences in lawns and especially within annual and perennial planting beds. Stoloniferous grasses, such as the Creeping Bentgrass of putting greens, croquet courts, and lawn bowling greens, form horizontal stems above ground that spread laterally in all directions.

Seasons matter. Tu ff grasses grow most quickly and, importantly establish roots with energy stores, in the cool and wet seasons of spring and fall. In summer, turf grasses may go dormant; or at least their growth rate moderates.

The best time to fertilize is the fall; second best time to fertilize is the spring. Leaving grass clippings on the lawn throughout a growing season amounts to the same amount of nutrients as is contained in one store-bought fertilizer application. This technique also eliminates time-consuming bagging; and it's free.

The best time to establish a new lawn or to rejuvenate a "tired" lawn is the fall; second best time is the spring. Autumn is the best time because of moderate soil temperatures, usually ample soil moisture, and reduced competition from weeds.

Mow turfgrass frequently, removing no more than one third of blade length each time. This may mean mowing more frequently than weekly during a wet spring and autumn. Set the mower high: 2?" to 3" during the hottest part of summer to reduce need for mowing and to reduce heat stress. Sharp blades minimize the wound created by mowing and thus reduce disease.

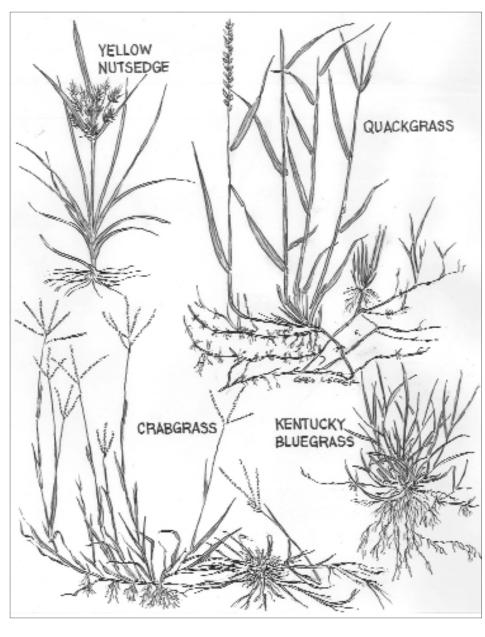

Water in the morning to allow foliage to dry off most rapidly. Roots, not foliage, are the part of the plant needing moisture. The longer foliage remains wet, the more likely plant diseases will develop. Water infrequently but deeply to establish and promote deeper root structures. Frequent, light watering encourages germination of crabgrass and other annual grass weeds at the expense of turfgrass.

When considering chemical control, it is important to recognize that grasses are monocots (parallel leaf veination, single-leaf seedlings) and many turf weeds are dicots (spreading leaf veination, two-leaf seedlings). Examples of monocots include grasses, daylilies, iris and palms. Examples of dicots include weeds like dandelion and creeping Charlie, most perennial and annual flowers as well as most trees. Herbicides can be formulated to target dicots and thus spare the monocot grass.

Kentucky Bluegrass (Poa pratensis) Grass family, 18" to 24" tall (for mature plants including flowering stems; of course mowed grass doesn't approach this mature height). Perennial Kentucky Bluegrass is native to much of Europe, northern Asia, and northern mountainous Africa.

Crabgrass (Digitaria sangunalis – Large Crabgrass, and Digitaria ischaemum -Smooth Crabgass) Grass family, 2" to 4" long grass blades, but with ground-hugging stems that can reach 3' long or high (if not moved) including flower stems. Plants may produce seed within turf mowed as short as one-quarter-inch tall; so mowing offers no control. Flowers form mid- to late-summer; and seed heads persist through winter. Seeds germinate from mid-spring through mid-summer. This annual weed is killed by frosts. Crabgrass tolerates higher temperatures and drier soils than most turfgrasses; and so crabgrass may be found along edges of turf areas, including near sidewalks, curbs, and pavement.

Control for this and other annual grasses is possible through use of preemergent herbicides to disrupt germination and to kill very young grass seedlings. Two applications may be necessary – the first application watered into the ground about two weeks before crabgrass germination — between approximately April 20 and May 15 and a second application about three to four weeks following the first application. Typically, crabgrass sprouts around Memorial Day in the Twin Cities area. The reason for the range in date of application is that spring temperatures fluctuate widely from year to year. Follow herbicide package instructions for further direction.

Quackgrass (Agropyron repens, aka, Elytrigia repens) Grass family, up to 3' tall including flower stems, frequently bending at leaf nodes.

Quackgrass can be a lawn weed, but it is even more of a pest within perennial and annual planting beds. The Latin name means a 'sudden field of fire', and aptly describes the speed of its infestation. If seedling Quackgrass plants are permitted to grow rhizomes, plants can quickly spread throughout a planting bed. Rhizomes are white or light tan, and formfrequent "nodes" from which fine root hairs form. Hand weeding is rarely successful, as rhizomes net themselves within roots of perennials and annuals. Repeated, careful applications of herbicides, most easily non-selective glyphosate sold under the brand name Round-up can be successful. In perennial gardens, a selective systemic herbicide containing fluazifop (fusilade) (Ortho-Grass-B-Gon) can also be used successfully. It is important to apply this only to quackgrass leaves as it may damage or kill all monocots (daylilies, iris, gladiolus, lilies) once it contacts leaves. Early application before perennials emerge or before annual planting is one technique. Other herbicide techniques include careful "painting" of herbicide using a foam brush, and masking desired plants or containing offending Quackgrass plants within a cardboard box. Careful monitoring and herbicide reapplication for any remaining Quackgrass is necessary to eradicate infestations.

Yellow Nutsedge (Cyperus esculentus) Sedge family, approximately 6" to 12" tall. Perennial leaves are grooved and shiny. Leaves form in groups of three around the base of triangular stems. Flower stems are threesided. Flowers bloom from July to September. Roots are spreading with one-half inch to one-inch tubers at ends of rhizomes. Reproduction occurs by seeds but more commonly via rhizomes and tubers which can be spread via cultivation, through topsoil transfer or in nursery stock. Tubers may lie dormant for up to ten years, complicating eradication of this weed. Yellow Nutsedge grows as a weed in flower and agricultural plantings as well as in turfgrass.

Bryn Mawr Redistricting 2012 Ward and Park Boundaries

inneapolis recently redrew the lines for its wards and for the park districts in response to the population information contained in the 2010 Census. Bryn Mawr emerged intact from this redistricting process, and remains entirely in Ward 7 and Park District 4. However, this did not occur without a struggle.

From the very beginning of the redistricting process, the Bryn Mawr Neighborhood Association and its committee on redistricting requested that in the redistricting process, Bryn Mawr be kept intact within Ward 7. At the earliest meetings of the Minneapolis Redistricting Group, which consisted of 7 volunteers from the city neighborhoods and the Charter Commission members, the Redistricting Group kept Bryn Mawr intact within the 7th ward and the 4th park district. In fact, in the earliest maps, the 7th ward and 4th park district northern line was drawn at Glenwood Avenue - effectively cutting Harrison Neighborhood into two wards. And, although the Redistricting Group worked on trying to get Harrison into one ward, it was left split between Wards 7 and 5 along Glenwood Avenue.

In the earliest meetings of the Redistricting Group, all open to the public and with a short public comment section at the end, there were very few observers, sometimes no more than the Bryn Mawr observer and perhaps one or two more. But as the redistricting efforts moved forward, more populations moved forward to request their voices and their wishes be heard, and towards the end, voicing their anger at not getting what they thought was "fair" redistricting.

The first organized group presenting its petition and offering its ideas for redistricting were the East African community. They requested and offered maps in support of how district lines could be drawn to make them into a large enough community that they might be able to vote for an East African to the City Council. The Latino community also petitioned that their communities not be split in such a way as to make it difficult to elect one of their own to represent them. Small business communities did not want to be split up. The Native American community also made its plea.

As the work of the Redistricting Group progressed, more and more members of the public - some representing neighborhoods, some representing ethnic groups, some representing businesses, and some representing their own wishes - started coming to the Redistricting Group meetings and petitioning for their views to be represented on the map. After each meeting, the Redistricting Group voted on the changes they were able to make to the new ward lines based on what they were hearing from the public. After the vote, the Operations Committee of the Redistricting Group would take the changes and incorporate them into new draft maps which were then published and available for review and comment and the next Redistricting Group meeting.

On February 29 and March 1 and again on March 20 and March 21 the Redistricting Group held public meetings. The meetings were very well attended - at each set of public meetings, one meeting was located at a southern location and the other was held at a northern meeting.

Bryn Mawr was well represented at these public meetings. Past BMNA presidents Steve Pundt and Kevin Johnson spoke, as well as current BMNA president, Marlin Possehl, as did David Kelliher, Margaret Anderson Kelliher, and members of the BMNA Redistricting Committee. At every opportunity, the Bryn Mawr contingent asked that Bryn Mawr be kept intact within Ward 7 and Park District 4.

All these months of work by the Redistricting Group was done in preparation for the legislative maps that would be released by the Minnesota Court special redistricting panel on February 21. The legislative map would be the Master Map.

When the legislative map was published on February 21, it was immediately evident that Bryn Mawr had been split into two - two thirds were in House District #61A and about one third was in House District 59B. The line dividing the two Districts ran along I-394 and then north along South Cedar Lake Road. South of I394/South Cedar Lake Road, Bryn Mawr folks were in District 61A and north of that line, Bryn Mawr folk were in District 59B.

The immediate result of the publication of the state legislative maps was that the Minneapolis Redistricting Group placed, in compliance with the legislative lines, a very small portion of Bryn Mawr, south of Bassett's Creek, into Ward 5. In that same redrafting of the city ward maps, Harrison was made whole within Ward 5. The BMNA Redistricting committee asked the Minneapolis Redistricting Group to revert to the original maps it had drawn, one which had all of Bryn Mawr in Ward 7. We argued that since there was no population in that small portion of Bryn Mawr that was placed in Ward 5, it would not affect (because there was no population change) any other ward, and no maps would need to be redrawn. We were told this was not possible, that if the 7th ward line were to be redrawn back to Bassett's Creek, Bryn Mawr neighborhood's real boundary, it would create a very small precinct that would have no population - and that couldn't be.

The BMNA Redistricting Committee immediately consulted with Council Member Lisa Goodman, Representative Marion Greene, and Senator Scott Dibble to see if Bryn Mawr's northeastern legislative boundary in Bassett's Creek could be drawn at the neighborhood's real boundary rather than below it, along the railroad line running south of the Creek. Council Member Goodman put Bryn Mawr in touch with the City Clerk, Casey J. Carl and with the City's Election Specialist, Judy Schwartau who advised that Bryn Mawr had a very short window (about 24 hours) to appeal to the Secretary of State's office. The Secretary of State could make some small changes administratively, but larger changes were being gathered by his office, reviewed and recommendations would be made, then presented to the legislature for their action. The City Clerk thought our appeal, because there was no population in the area where we wished to have the line redrawn (if the state legislative district line were changed, then the ward line could follow the state legislative line) might qualify as an administrative change. The appeal we were requesting was that the small portion of Bryn Mawr on the eastern edge of the neighborhood have its legislative district line redrawn to follow the neighborhood's eastern boundary. On calling the Secretary of State's office to determine format and time for sending in our appeal, Bryn Mawr was informed that appeals could not be presented by neighborhoods or individuals, that appeals could only be presented through a government representative, e.g. the City Clerk. Mr. Casey was kind enough to make the appeal on Bryn Mawr's behalf. In very short order, Bryn Mawr's request was turned down.

Additionally, State Representative Marion Greene and State Senator Scott Dibble contacted the office of the Secretary of State to appeal that the northern legislative line of Bryn Mawr be redrawn to the neighborhood's boundary. They were unsuccessful in their appeal.

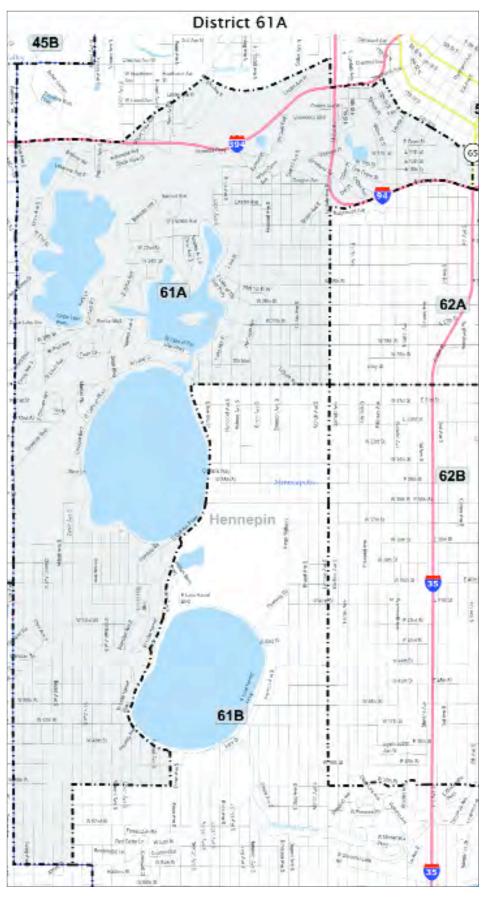

However, through private sources in the Secretary of State's office, we were told that Bryn Mawr was denied its appeal to have its northeastern boundary changed at the legislative level because the remedy lay with the City Redistricting group. We were told that the City Redistricting Group could make the change itself. Armed with this information and with assistance from the City Clerk who determined that no new precinct needed to be created if the line were redrawn, we went back to the City Redistricting Group to request that the northern ward line on the northeastern edge of Bryn Mawr be drawn at the real neighborhood line.

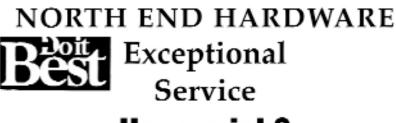

At the next Redistricting meeting, a letter from the Harrison Neighborhood Association had been sent to the City Redistricting Group requesting that the line not be redrawn to Bryn Mawr's northeastern boundary and advocating that part of Bryn Mawr should be left in Ward 5. As both requests were examined, a member of the City Redistricting Group, Terra Cole, expressed opposition to the line being redrawn to the northeastern boundary of Bryn Mawr. This member supported Harrison's request that this section of Bryn Mawr be ceded to Harrison's control. She indicated she had talked to several people in Harrison and they had given her a variety of reasons that this should be so. After the meeting, the Bryn Mawr folks were told that Ms. Cole is a likely candidate for House Representative for District 59B. House District 59B, includes a large chunk of Bryn Mawr. Ms. Cole indicated she had taken her position after talking to Harrison, but she had not spoken to members of the Bassett Creek Valley Redevelopment Oversight Committee, which over the past 15 years, in partnership with Harrison, had created a master plan for the entire Bassett's Creek Valley, including this section of Bryn Mawr. Nor had she talked to anyone in the business community in the Bassett's Creek Valley. And, finally, she had not spoken to anyone on the Bryn Mawr Neighborhood Association about the issue.

After discussion, the Redistricting Group voted to redraw the map to reflect Bryn Mawr's request to be included in its entirety in Ward 7 and Park District 4.

he BMNA School Committee met with Ryan Fair, Director of Enrollment for the Minneapolis Public Schools, on Thursday, April 19. School committee members were able to share their concerns about a variety of topics including the impact of re-districting on school boundaries, school choice, and class size. At this point, boundary changes are not being discussed in the department of enrollment. According to Ryan, the political re-districting will not have an affect on school boundaries. The district is grappling with issues of growth and decline in student population in different parts of town. Depending on where growth or decline occurs, schools may have grade configuration changes, such as a K-8 moving to a K-5.

The committee spent considerable time talking about the expansion of the Go-To Card Program, which will affect bussing for high schools through out the district. The Go-To Card Program is expanding in fall 2012 to include eligible high school students at Edison, Henry, North, Roosevelt, Washburn, Wellstone and Expanded Option students at Southwest. Other eligible high school students at Southwest and South will join the program in the fall of 2013. The following link explains the program and has FAQs.

Anwatin's 2012 Food Drive a Record Success!

nwatin and the CM3 Elite Car Club joined together to bring a record 2,562 pounds of food to Branch I Food Shelf! This was the second year for the car club to work with Anwatin, and their support was much appreciated.

The Anwatin Community Service Team (CST) was also able to deliver a check from RBC Dain Rauscher for $1,904 besides another $45 from Anwatin to help the food shelf stock its culturally specific food items. A special thank you also goes out to Cup O Java, Freddy's Pizza and Bryn Mawr Market who supported the food drive through having food collection boxes at their businesses.

Anwatin staff helped to "gear up" the students by agreeing to do various things if Anwatin met its goal. On Friday, April 13 we saw these great staff do the following:

Mr. Alexander – color his hair blue Ms. Blattner – go the entire day without wearing jewelry

Ms. Brittany – bring chocolate chip cookies for the CST

Mr. Casell – sing a song over the intercom

Mr. Chipoco – duct tape man!

Mr. Clark – wear a tutu and a wig Mr. Diaz - wear a tutu and get his face painted! Ms. Dwight – bring hot chocolate for the winning advisory

Ms. Fabiola - will dye her hair rainbow colors

Mrs. Forest – have a student/s of her choice dye her hair

Ms. Hanson - wear her clothes backwards and get her face painted

Ms. Isha – dye her hair blond and bring juice for the CST

Ms. Jannatpour - will let Serge, Michael and Jaime paint her face

Ms. Kalli – wear bunny ears to school

Mr. Kesslar – wear a wig Ms. Lou – make pies for the winning

Ms. Madison - bake cookies for the winning advisory

Ms. Mahon - shave her head Mrs. Miller - ???

Mr. Purvis – wear a dress

Mr. Stassen – let his advisory shave his

Mrs. Wernimont – dye her hair pink Ms. Zimmerman – will not wear jewelry

Congratulations to Anwatin and the winning advisories - Mr. White's collected the most items and Ms. Herzog's had the most participation.

Congratulations to the Community Service Team for a job well done!

This is what Branch I coordinator, Megan Burman, wrote in her thank you note to Anwatin: "Thank you so much for your work in organizing such a MASSIVE* donation! I'm speechless! What a big thing to take on and it went so well. . . Those kiddos are going to grow up to be friendly, worldly, and wise. Peace to Anwatin!"

> THANK YOU! -Meg Kenknight-Burman

Who Let The Moms Out?

Eight Bryn Mawr Moms on the Search for Good Books and Food

The Paris Wife, by Paula McLain

7ritten in first person, this is a fictionalized story of Emest Hemingway's first marriage, told from the perspective of his wife, Hadley. But more than a book about living with a soon-tobe famous author, it's the tale of a powerful relationship and what happened as Hemingway gained fame.

Married in 1921, the couple lived in Paris, where the lives of the who's who in the literary world played out in the café's and salons; a window into an era of famous historical writers, poets and painters. Being fiction, it's hard to tell what's real and what's coming only from McLain's consciousness. But as Hemingway said, "There's no one thing that's true, it's all true."

This was an engaging exploration of the mores of marriage and sexual license in the 1920's. Among the Hemingway crowd, marriage wasn't revered; the women had careers and there was a great deal of sexual freedom. But still, their friends admired the implausible marriage of E mest and Hadley, for the love they held for each other. And Hadley felt that what they had was "rare and true, and that we were safe in the marriage we had built." In Hadley's eyes, it was a mutually beneficial relationship; she never expressed any bitterness in the last years of her life. She was satisfied knowing that she possessed the traits that could help Ernest get through the struggles of being a writer. Ninety years later, there are surprising parallels with issues around marriage, children, and careers.

The book didn't get a unanimous thumbs up from our group. The use of first person distracted from the story for some, and Hemingway's over-bearing personality made it difficult to understand what Hadley got from the relationship. But we mostly found it a fascinating account of Hadley's love for Ernest Hemingway, the early years with their son Bumby, and the famous writers and times following WWI in Paris. There are some books you hate to have end. This is one of those. We were sad when it was done.

Calling All Graduates!

¬ he Bugle will be running its annual tribute to graduates in the IULY issue.
